MORE SUBMARINE BOATS.

Talk of the United States Navy Building Torpedo Boats of the Holland Type.

Shortly the board of naval construction will take up for consideration the subject of increasing the number of submarine torpedo boats. There is likely to be a division of opinion on the matter. It is said that Rear Admiral O'Neil, chief of ordnance, and Chief Constructor Highborn are in favor of building more boats of that type, while Rear Admiral Melville, engineer in chief, and Chief of the Equipment Bureau Bradford are not disposed to favor the idea. Secretary Long will probably be guided largely by the advice of his experts in making recommendations to congress on the sub-

There are some flattering reports relating to the Holland, which is be- their circumstances were at the best ginning to see practical service. The boat, naval officers say, has contributed a new and menacing element to naval operations and has presented new problems which must be met. Capt. Folger, commanding the Kearsarge, already anticipated this when he suggested a provision of light torpedo boats to guard against the invasion by Submarine boats.

It has evidently become necessary, say the naval strategists, to add small picket boats to the cargo of a big ship in order to offset the effect of the submarine boat. The seven boats of the latter type now under contract will provide a liberal strength in this respect, but some of the naval officers believe we should continue the work. Others believe we should await the result of the trials of the boats now under contract and take advantage of any improvements which may be sug- Barings. His sons were the first Baring

AN ILLINOIS SNAKE

Takes Up Quarters in a Newspaper Office and Expels the Mice.

Every well-regulated printing office has a watering can in which water is kept to wet the type. For want of a better place, the one in the Home Journal office is usually kept on a window sill on the north side of the room. One day during the recent drought two of our printers were sitting on their stoors at this window sticking type, when they were nearly petrified by the sight of a snake protruding its head above the sill from the outside. The boys almost broke their necks in getting away. Reaching over into the pan, the snake took a good drink, and, before the startled printers could secure a club with which to dispatch the reptile, it had disappeared, says the Lacon (III.) Home Journal.

The next day at the same hour the snake came for another drink, and this was repeated the third and fourth days, but the last time it was attacked from the rear by a big black Thomas cat that makes its home at Lester's livery barn, next door. It was a lively fight for a few seconds, but the cat was too much for the snake, although it was fully four feet long, and the reptile made a shoot for the rear of the office. The cat was after it like a streak of lightning, but the snake found a hole ir the brick wall and disappeared under the building. That was two weeks ago. Before that time the printing office was overrun with mice, but since then there hasn't been a mouse about the place. Any of our readers who are troubled with mice are cordially invited to come and borrow our snake for a few days.

German Writer Says the Chancellor

Speculated on State Secrets. A pamphlet has recently appeared in is a member of the old Junker party of the name of Diebat Daher, and it professes to give some curious details in regard to the present fortune of the ex-chancellor and how it was acquired. After the German war of 1870 the prince received from the country two estates of no great value, which, coupled with his own paternal estate, brought him in a fair revenue. He then left Bleichroeder to look after his private monetary affairs, with the result that he now has a fortune amounting to 150,000,000 marks. This, the author estimates, can only have been made by stock exchange speculations, based on the knowledge that the prince derived from his position at the head of the German government, and which he confided to Bleichroeder. That, with the cares of empire on his shoulders, he left his monetary affairs the peace will marry next. This is in the hands of his banker is very posonly six marriages performed this sible, and equally possible is it that his winter in and around this vicinity. banker did the best for his client. But I should require a good deal more evidence than is afforded in this pamphlet > ica was discovered at a depth of 17 feet on the farm of John A. Gray, residing nine miles north of Muncie Ind., says the Chicago Chronicle, and the discovery is attracting the attention of people for mues around. Bones of several skeletons of a race of people, apparently of giant size, were > Almost all were in a remarkable state of preservation. Besides these there were a number of earthen bowls or pots, several pieces of small iron rods, one bearing a handle of some un-known material. The discovery was made at the bottom of a sand pit According to the size on the bones the persons averaged a height of eight

> When asked relative to the discovery Mr. Gray told a most remarkable story, which strangery coincides with the discovery and which still renders the find all the more mysterious. He stated that several months ago two strange men called at his home and asked permission to dig in the sand pit. They being strangers the privilege was not granted. At this the strangers said that he would rue the refusal as long as he lived, as there was an Indian village far beneath the earth's surface, and near by would be found a buried treasure in gold.

DESCENT OF THE BARINGS.

History of a Great Commercial Family Extending Through Centuries. Two centuries ago there lived at Bremen, in Germany, a pastor of the Lutheran church named Franz Baring, or Baering. In those days, says Spare Moments, the ministers of his order might be men of great learning, but moderate. His son, John Baring, went to England and established himself as a clothmaker near Exeter, in Devonshire. From the ranks of the cloth drapers and the linen drapers, quite as often as from among the goldsmiths, the merchants and bankers were then recruited. John Baring's son, Francis, born in 1740, was sent at an early age to learn the "art, trade and mystery" of a merchant, and before he died he made himself, by consent, the first merchant in the world. He was a director in the Honorable East Indian Company, then one of the highest rewards to which a merchant might hope to attain; for a time he was the great company's chairman; for twenty-two years he sat in parliament, then a far more exclusive body than it has become under the extended suffrage; in 1703 hs was made a baronet; in 1810 he died. But his first title to honor is that he founded the house of
